The sources of information that people use to explore new destinations differ significantly across generation. For the older generation, trust lies in travel agency websites and reviews from fellow travelers, appreciating the convenience of pre-filtered material. However, the younger demographic gravitates towards platforms that provide captivating visual content, such as Instagram and YouTube.

A notable majority of participants globally, comprising a significant 60%, disclosed that their travel experiences are most often shared with their family members. This inclination is particularly pronounced among individuals aged 35 to 54. However, as the pages of life turn, those between the ages of 55 to 64 display a distinct preference for embarking on captivating sojourns hand-in-hand with their partners.

When it comes to lodging preferences, the general consensus leans towards modest and affordable accommodations, typically ranging between three and four stars and budgetfriendly options, emphasizing the desire for comfort without excessive extravagance.

A prevailing trend among 64% of global respondents is their emphasis on prioritizing high-quality and comfortable travel experiences. Security-related matters are the second most important factor for half of the global respondents, reflecting the fundamental need for travelers to feel safe and secure throughout their trips. Additionally, competitive prices also hold significant weight, particularly in Canada, where travelers rank this factor as their second priority.
